Learning something together -- even remotely

Being inventive

Challenges

Finding desire to do things outside of class

Isolation in a time of remote learning

Keeping up when things get difficult

Motivation

Resources that take a long time to get through

Motivation

What do you think college students learn about teaching from self-tutoring?

How to break down learning goals into smaller steps

I can learn anything I want to

Learning can be fun

Understanding different access points (starting with different levels of background knowledge) to support students

Growth Mindset

Empathy and an deeper awareness of how people learn. This can inform teaching

Persistence

I can self-guide my learning

Self tutoring is the intersection of multiple subjects

Learning is continuous. It only stops when I stop

I can learn anything I want, and taking the first step is always the hardest

What growth mindset really means and motivation skills

Problem Solving Skills

How to support students to self-tutor (support remote learning)

Self-tutoring is a WIN-WIN-WIN for future teachers

- Selecting what to learn and how you receive tutoring
- Achieving new knowledge and skills
- Planning how you will teach others
