Editors Note

Four of the nine papers contained in this volume are devoted to issues in First Language Acquisition, the others deal with sentence processing or more general psycholinguistic issues.

It is our policy in the Graduate Linguistic Student Association to accept UMASS generals papers for publication in a volume of Occasional Papers without additional review. All other papers whether written specifically for inclusion in the volume or not undergo independent review. This volume was put together partly because in the last few years members of the Linguistics and Psychology departments have been particularly productive in the psycholinguistic domain. The reader is asked to take account of the fact that many of the papers in this volume were written some time ago.
