Acknowledgments

THE SEEDS of this volume were sown in the spring of 1994, in a series of conversations with a number of Sudanese friends, colleagues, and students—whose identities will remain anonymous for political reasons—at the University of Khartoum. I am grateful to them for information, insights, and inspirations which emerge in numerous places in the chapters I contributed to this text. While I gratefully acknowledge their help, I alone bear the full responsibility for the information, judgment, and conclusions set forth in these chapters. I would also like to extend my appreciation to many Sudanese friends in Khartoum for their inestimable hospitality during my stay in Sudan in the springs of 1988 and 1994.

The production of a volume such as this one owes much to collaborations. I would like to thank the contributing authors for their willingness to be part of this endeavor and for submitting their manuscript in the shortest possible time. Their extensive research experience and insights have greatly enriched the volume. I would like to note, however, that the contributors do not necessarily share each other's perspectives and views expressed in this volume. The contributors also bear the responsibility for any errors of fact, interpretation, and opinions expressed in their own individual chapters. And, finally, I would like to thank Contributions in Black Studies for making these essays available as a thematic number.
